This oversized collection has amazing production quality, and by the way, the story and art are pretty darn good. No spoilers, but a little prayer that season ten of the library editions will soon follow. Solid character development and some really funny moments. A certain character books it after hearing about another character being in trouble and that was a bit disappointing. Wishing said character would've stuck around more as I was really digging the banter. Overall it did a good job of fleshing out the new faces as well, some of those I thought were more disappointing characters had some great moments. Overall it felt twice the quality of Buffy season 9 which I thought showed some promise early on but ended up staying at about the same level as season 8. Really this book was good, I found it a very satisfying read and look forward to the next season.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. About the AuthorIn the words of Christos Gage... I was born in New York, then grew up in Athens, Greece and North Grafton, Massachusetts. Started reading at age 3, discovered comics soon after. First comic collected and saved: Marvel's Godzilla. Never quit comics for girls the way some flip-floppers do, though I did keep it in the closet at times, for which I am deeply ashamed. Attended Brown University (here's a secret: the Ivy League is overrated) where I majored in American Civilization, a field that allowed me to take classes like The Blues and The Spy Novel, which have come in a lot handier in my life than algebra. Got a Master's Degree in Screenwriting from the American Film Institute. Sold my first screenplay in 1997 and have been a professional writer ever since, with several scripts sitting on shelves gathering dust and a few actually produced. Started writing comics in December 2004. Married to the lovely Southern firecracker Ruth Fletcher Gage, who is my writing partner in film and television, though she had enough sense to stay away from Teenage Caveman. We have plans to collaborate on two graphic novels in the future. We live with our cats, Frankie and Josie. The author lives in Santa Monica, CA..
