Mike Shepperdson : Income Distribution and Health in a North Indian Village before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Income Distribution and Health in a North Indian Village:

This is primarily a study of the effects of India's political economy on the health of its rural population. The empirical data is mainly based on four month's fieldwork in a village 40 miles from Lucknow, in Uttar Pradesh. The fieldwork included a survey of the income and health of 102 households; physical measurement of nearly 500 villagers; "participant observation" of the village and of the nearby Primary Health Centre; and interviews with over 50 local medical practitioners, users of a variety of medical systems.
